

In 2018, 2019, and 2020, mass demonstrations broke out across the globe, demanding widespread political reforms such as equal rights, more citizen participation in governance, and justice. These protests have been powerful, in many cases instigating real long-term change. Sudan, Lebanon, and the United States are stark examples of mobilizations that have produced - or are in process - seismic shifts to their political systems. With this in mind, the theme of this edition of our Peace Pulse is Challenges and Opportunities of Transitions.

In Sudan, nonviolent civil resistance succeeded in removing the regime of former President Omar al-Bashir in April 2019 and in establishing a transitional government. Yet one year in, there is a need and opportunity for the Transitional Government and other actors to develop and build consensus around a coherent, inclusive plan for the transition period. In response to this need, CDI's Sudan Team developed and disseminated draft options for how the various transitional processes can be sequenced and linked effectively to inform a comprehensive plan. CDI then conducted a number of consultations with Sudanese actors on those options. The findings of the consultations are detailed in CDI's report "Consultations on Options for the Sequencing and Linkages of Political Processes during the Transitional Period in Sudan."

Somalia is also in the midst of a political transition, with the electoral process and the nature of federalism topics of heated national debates. The country has been preparing for direct national elections, having passed a new electoral law in February 2020 that moves the country away from the previous method of indirect elections via clan elders. However, due to COVID-19, security and other technical issues, and a lack of consensus on implementing the new electoral law, the Federal Government and Federal Member States recently agreed to maintain an indirect model of elections with an expanded voter pool for the upcoming 2020/21 elections in order to hold the elections on time. In "Political Dialogue in Somalia: Reaching Consensus on Elections During COVID-19," the Somali Dialogue Platform, including CDI, discusses in more detail the challenges and potential ways forward for the upcoming elections.

We are pleased to showcase some articles related to the challenges and opportunities of political transitions published within the last couple of months. "Dysfunctional Federalism" by the Heritage Institute discusses the boundaries of authority between the Somali Federal Government and Federal Member States and challenges of reconciliation among Somali political stakeholders. Also, this analysis from the Carnegie Endowment, examines the credibility of elections during a pandemic as well as its impact on democracy.

CDI remains committed to supporting peaceful political transitions where people and groups from different backgrounds are included and their voices heard. Our team can offer guidance on supporting parties to conflict in resolving their differences, designing political processes that promote inclusivity and participation, and addressing the root causes of conflict. We hope that these articles will support you in your work on similar issues.

The United States

Although CDI's current work is primarily focused on East Africa, recent events have emphasized the pervasive effects of exclusion and inequality in the United States and the potential applicability of our work there. As worldwide demand for tools to address the roots of inequality and suffering increases, we are finalizing our Political Accommodation Handbook with a grant from the Cummings Foundation. The Handbook presents practical, user-friendly guidance to enable people to reconcile divergent interests in a fair and inclusive manner and will initially be shared through trainings in the United States and East Africa.

Peacebuilding & Governance

Peacebuilding

CDI's peace action work focuses on preventing conflict, peacemaking and building sustainable peace. Our main strategy for this is political accommodation - a method for enabling users to develop their own approaches to reconciling divergent interests equitably.

Governance

Governance arrangements and political dialogue processes provide structure to a political system and help guide whether or not it is inclusive and participatory. CDI's governance and process frameworks support groups from different backgrounds to identify drivers of conflict in the system and develop creative solutions for addressing them.

The Peace Pulse seeks to inform readers about recent debates and scholarship related to peacebuilding and governance, and CDI's peacebuilding contexts: Somalia and Somaliland, South Sudan, and Sudan. CDI's peacebuilding initiatives aim to prevent and resolve violent conflict and to foster political stability. In working toward this goal, CDI supports people and their representatives to develop, agree upon, and implement practical arrangements for political dialogue processes and governance that accommodate diverse political interests in a balanced way.
